

Patrice K. Muhammad

Editor

Patrice K. Muhammad was born and raised in Detroit, MI, a city she is very proud of. “Growing up in Detroit, I was able to see Black homeowners, business owners, doctors, mayors, police officers and teachers. I never felt that there was anything that Black people couldn’t do. I hope that the Key Newsjournal is able to reflect the diversity of the Black experience so that our youth feel that they have a limitless potential like I did.”

After graduating from Cooley High School she attended Central State University and majored in Elementary and Music Education. She has played the clarinet for more than 25 years and played one season with the Central Kentucky Concert Band.

She began writing in middle school as a reporter for her school newspaper. In college she began a pen pal program for Detroit youth and CSU students who were from all over the US and Africa.

Patrice is a member of Zeta Phi Beta Sorority, Inc. and Mu Phi Epsilon, Music Fraternity.

Patrice is committed to the liberation of Blacks in America and believes that knowledge of self is “the key”.

She enjoys sharing information with groups and is available for speaking engagements.